- Do you know with certainty where your assets will go if you suddenly pass away?
- Will your family have to go to Probate Court if you pass away?
- Who can legally make decisions for you if you are unable to make them for yourself?

Estate planning is not just for the elderly. If you suddenly become injured or incapacitated, there are things you can do now, that allow someone else to help you with legal and medical decision making. There are things you can do now to make sure your assets go to the right people. These important questions can be decided now while you are healthy. Don't let the courts decide for you.
